

Local Politics Matter

Guns

Good or Bad They Kill

I don't own a gun and don't come from a family where we find them necessary. I was born and raised in Baltimore, MD at one time the murder capital of America. Yeah, I wished I had a gun on occasions but it wasn't because I wanted or needed the protection. It was because somebody pissed me off by messing with me or mine and I wanted to kill them. Kill, for a stupid reason that when given time to think or reflect it was just that, stupid. The flood of hateful emotions rose with such viciousness that this God fearing woman wanted to commit to breaking a commandment and KILL.

After the Orlando shooting the gun debate is now bigger and nastier than ever. The way it's heard depends on which side you are on. The infamous NRA has been buying power, collecting millions of dollars to keep that power and selling souls to the devil for the last fifty or so years. Now that assault rifles are being purchased by everyday Americans, the non-gun owners are having a louder cry, crying to level out the field through legislation. Their perspective is that no non-military person should ever have their hands on a military grade weapon, a weapon of war. Its only purpose is to kill and to kill many. Kill many doesn't say bad guys and it doesn't say good guys. It's just to kill, period.

Guns don't kill people, people with guns kill people according to some. And that crazy head of the NRA, touting guns in the hands of a good person is better than guns in the hands of a bad person. Well, I gave that a lot of thought and I deduced that most of the people were reasonably good until they used that gun! That's how they got the gun. LOOPHOLE!

I could not find a single incident where the bullet could tell a good person from a bad person no matter who pulled the trigger. It's overwhelming to me. Guns are being used to kill, not to protect. I have to repeat that. Guns are killing, not protecting. You see, it doesn't matter whose hand the gun is in, a life is being taken. A previous life! We are taking away a person that belongs to and is loved by someone. We are Christians bound by the commandment sent down to us from God, remember him, delivered to us by Moses. THOU SHALL NOT KILL. Now if the life happens to belong to someone who is not worthy of that life because of past behaviors, incidents or unlawfulness, his life ending is already accounted for. Straight to Hell, so why does it matter who shoots whom? Point Across

Share Your Comments

Return to LPM

