The Best Defense to a Bad Guy With a Gun ...

Nice Guy Finished Last

On March 13, 2016 Officer Jacoi Colson was gunned down by friendly fire. Am I wrong in thinking that he was a good guy with a gun? It is not surprising to me that those NRA people or the group that calls themselves the FOP never uttered a word about the tragedy of this fallen officer/Hero. But it does make me wonder if Officer Colson was white would he have been shot. It's the same old thing again, "killed while Black." I can not help but believe that somebody on this suspicious murder knew that this Officer did not fit the profile of the reckless behavior of the individual who started this mess. I wasn't there but it's awfully suspicious how the quick triggered police officers always want to shoot first and ask questions later. I'm sure that Colson, a trained officer showed some signs of being a good guy. The way he walked, the way he was dressed, the way he positioned himself while approaching a dangerous situation. I'm sure that this officer followed his training techniques that should have been recognized by other officers. Shoot first, he had a gun; I was in fear of my life. That's how they get away with murder. Only this time it was one of their own. Can you imagine how many innocent people would be killed by law enforcement or others if we lived by that theory? A good guy with a gun! Yeah right. How many others? I'm sure the FOP will justify this one to their advantage as well. Let the spin begin. Just think on this for a minute. Guns on college campuses, guns in grocery stores, guns in churches, here a gun everywhere a gun. NRA you must be joking. I rest my case. Do you? Did you apologize to that family, for spreading all of your lies for profit? A good man with a gun is down in part because of the lies.
